feed the future

Feed the Future is an integrated and sequential series of programs run by the Foodbank and designed to foster nutritional independence and the desire to build healthy communities in children, from the womb to high school graduation.

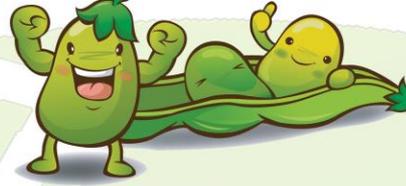

HEALTHY MOTHERS, HEALTHY BABIES

PRE-NATAL NUTRITION PROGRAM

1. A lifetime of good nutrition begins with your mother. By working with expectant mothers, they not only improve the health of themselves and baby, but they can train with us to become nutritional leaders in their communities. Congratulations!

FLIP

Food Literacy In Preschool

2. Food preferences are decided by preschool. Our community volunteers are there to introduce fresh produce through tasting games and activities. And there's even a bag of produce for the family.

3. We bring a farmers' market to low-income afterschool programs, providing fresh produce for the children as well as a cooking lesson into how to make all those icky vegetables delicious. They go home with both food and skills, which can begin powerful family transformation.

NUTRITIONAL INDEPENDENCE

8. This is where we put it all together! We make sure our young adults can budget, shop and cook for a lifetime of nutritional independence.

bring about the rise of food literacy and the end of childhood hunger in a single generation

4. Local schools become a focus for ending hunger and celebrating health and good nutrition. The whole family is involved in improving their food literacy and food security.

7. Kids are often hungry in the summer with no free school meals. Their brains and bodies still need to keep growing, so volunteers prepare and serve healthy lunches and provide games and food literacy training.

6. Children learn how to grow their own food wherever they can - plastic bucket or simple raised bed. They also learn not to give up when they don't succeed the first time! How's that for a life skill?

5. Middle school kids come together to get serious about cooking - the planning, the preparation and the execution. This intensive course ends with our young chefs cooking a meal for all their families.
